1. Field of the Invention
The present invention relates to a multi-mode radiation detection/diagnosis apparatus.

2. Description of the Related Art
A radiation detection/diagnosis apparatus, such as a positron emission tomography apparatus, is constructed to detect and diagnose a patient using radiation emitted from a radionuclide contained in a radiopharmaceutical. Recently, a radiation detection/diagnosis apparatus based on multiple imaging technologies has been developed. A Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open Publication No. 2013-264058 discloses a radiation detection/diagnosis apparatus (see FIG. 8 of JP2013-264058). The radiation detection/diagnosis apparatus of JP2013-264058 includes a plurality of detector groups and a plurality of collimator groups. Each of the plurality of detector groups is constructed to detect a radiation emitted from a subject through a plurality of collimator groups. According to the apparatus of JP2013-264058, a detector group, which detects a radiation emitted from a subject through a collimator group, is increased or decreased in accordance with the need. Thus, the radiation detection/diagnosis apparatus of JP2013-264058 is capable of efficiently detecting and diagnosing a patient by detecting a plurality of radiation (gamma rays) contained in a radiopharmaceutical. The radiation detection/diagnosis apparatus of JP2013-264058 is designed to detect, through a plurality of collimator groups, the radiation emitted from the subject. Accordingly, the radiation detection/diagnosis apparatus of JP2013-264058 is disadvantageous in that detecting the radiation emitted from the subject through each of the collimator groups has a time-consuming process. The radiation detection/diagnosis apparatus of JP2013-264058 is not described to detect the radiation emitted from the subject through the collimator groups. Accordingly, the radiation detection/diagnosis apparatus of JP2013-264058
